Mst detoxes are scamheads who find runaways and homeless and mentals and bring them in, process the insurance pay-out, and then kick them out saying their insurance doesn’t cover. Total scam, I did it. I&38217;m ashamed for how I acted, especially this young girl Ana...Long story. I'm in recovery now.

I know☹ I used to think I just had bad breaks in life and stuff but I realize you get to a certain age and that’s who you are. I’m trying to do my penance and give back, but that won’t save what happened to Ana.

But it was like a circle, and Ana was a tangent to it. All of us Body Brokers from Del Ray to Tampa, we&38217;d got new cars and condos and whores and were living like a Biggie video, but it was a dream based on exploiting people like Ana, who told me once all she wanted was to get clean and go home to take care off her little brother, who was a tard or something. I saw a pic of him once something fucked with his forehead.

Thanks for saying that, LiveStrong. I don't know how it happened, what I keep thinking about is the circle. We talk a lot about circles in recovery, shapes, trajectories of relapse and recovery. And the religious training I'm getting now is very much circular, elliptical, very Asian. The circle of life kind of thing. With Ana, I first saw her cracked out on the beach with the tide storming over her, a shirt with that Scream painting and Chucks, just on her back out of it. Pretty nice teeth, for a crackhead. And so I brought her in and she was so excited to get better and not have to blow guys for tame shit, and so long story we collected her parents premiums and kicked her out (saying she violated the Morals Policy when she let Snitch fuck her) and then a week later I found her bodyon the same beach, but it was sunrise, and her head was planted in the sand (hair like seaweed), and the tides were slow and gentle, lapping her body, like in mourning. I waited til I was down by Venice to call 911 and report it, I wasn't getting involved in that shit. ȃȃȃ.
